Call for Papers
International Colloquium in Stockholm
12th -13th of October 2020
”Tolerance(s) - concepts, language, history and practices”

The Edict of Nantes (detail), signed in 1598 and separating civil unity from religious

Drawing on discussions in the social sciences and humanities as well as in the civil society, this colloquium aims to bring together leading international scholars and early career researchers to explore and share perspectives on the meanings of tolerance, how it is being – and has been – imagined and practiced in history and in contemporary contexts. Focusing on intersecting discourses that shape the understanding and practicing of tolerance and its dynamic and close relation to intolerance, we encourage contributions of different disciplines and methodologies. We aim to offer a multi-disciplinary space that can illuminate the concept of tolerance from a variety of perspectives: linguistics, culture, literature, history, religion, sociology, education, law... Since 1995, the United Nations are proclaiming an International Tolerance Day every year. The initiative has since received considerable attention and has resulted in the publication of a large number of texts on the subject. These have shown that the definition and understanding of the term "tolerance" needs to be discussed and developed. The educational manual "Tolerance, the threshold of peace" thus shows that there are "whimsical and varying definitions", not least between different languages. It has proved particularly important to try to understand the underlying mechanisms when tolerance is upheld – or rejected – and to study the values that impede integration and vice versa, to identify the positions that make integration possible. We welcome submissions that depart from traditional academic papers as well as interdisciplinary interactions and/or the use of performance methods. Indicative themes include:

- (Un)conditionality of Tolerance
- Tolerance versus Intolerance
- Faith-based and Secular Tolerance(s)
- Practices of Literary and Artistic Tolerance
- Moralities of tolerance
- Tolerance in jurisdiction
- Education of tolerance

Abstracts (250 words) specifying your contribution as it relates to the themes of Tolerance and should be sent to tolerance2020@su.se by 8th of April 2020. Name, Institution/affiliation, short-biography (max100 words) and contact details must be submitted along with the abstract. Decisions will be communicated in the week beginning on the 22nd of June 2020.

Individual papers are allotted 30 minutes: 20 minutes for the presentation and 10 minutes for questions and discussion. The language of the colloquium is predominantly English, but contributions in other languages may also be accepted. If needed, we will do our best to find practical solutions in terms of interpretation and/or parallel sessions. Papers, presentations and performances submitted for the event will be considered for publication.
